There are some steps to maintain a fifth wheel camper. Firstly, the water tank. This needs to be filled with potable, clean water because this is used for showering, cooking and drinking. If you don't have clean potable water, you could buy tablets and purifiers to allow the water to be used in your camper. The waste tank for the toilet must be dumped in a campsite sanitation tank after you have utilized the toilet for several days. Waste tanks must contain special chemicals that help break down the waste material and keep the tank clean and sanitary. Moreover, the separate tank that is used to hold the waste water from kitchen sink and shower has to be emptied in a suitable way.

Fifth wheel campers also have batteries and generator to provide power and these must be fully charged before you leave. You should make a note of how long the generator will run since you don't want to lose power during your camping trip. Then again, lots of camp grounds have electricity supplied to each camping spot, so electrical power is not usually a concern.
